THE "STRAY-CAT" COMPLEX

"My Man Godfrey" was one of the era's finest comedies when it made its appearance with William Powell and Carole Lombard in the midst of the big depression some twenty years ago. Although not quite so topical today, the current version with David Niven and June Allison is top-flight entertainment.

What makes it CATS-worthy is a brief moment in the opening scene when the "mean" sister says about the nice one, "Oh, she has a stray-cat complex."

And Godfrey interjects an observation to the effect that from the stray cat's view-point, there are far worse complexes for people to have.

The world today with its increasing urbanization, its contempt of failure, its defication of success, no longer seems to have room for the "stray" who refuses its benefits nor for the individual with the "stray-cat" complex who believes in individual help rather than in organized assistance.

But the ideals and attitudes of a truly free society still operate. No child brought up in a home with a cat can fail to learn lessons of independence and self-reliance. Five national associations prove how interwoven in the personality of the adult cat fancier is the spirit of individuality. Agreement in aims, but complete freedom in thought and action can perhaps come close to describing the rationale of the Cat Fancy.

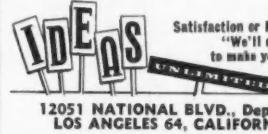

So here, in an age where all social pressures tend toward producing conformist mediocrity, is a sphere which can still welcome the contributing eccentric, the disrupting critic. And perhaps we can feel that by keeping these attitudes alive in the world of the cat, we may help to again bring about a day when in society at large the "stray" and the "stray-cat" complex will no longer be viewed with abhorrence.

LET CATS BE CATS . . .

Dear Editors:

You want a suggestion? Here are a few:

Good poetry enhances the value of CATS—there were several fine ones in the May issue.

Keep morbidly sad stories to a minimum.

Perhaps writers would rather only have initials given when sending questions to Dr. Renaux.

Let cats be portrayed as the independent individual creatures that they are. Intelligent, graceful and charming and not as pale reflections of the human race. Not as "little people" nor as some people think they should be.

Don't misunderstand me. I like your fine magazine and love the cover pictures.

FRIENDSHIP

Dear Editors:

You may be interested in part of a letter I received from my sister who lives in Arizona.

"I discovered sometime ago that my white mother cat was blind although she gets around very well. I have seen her walk along the top of the board fence and go to the corner to get down.

"She was due to have kittens last week and the day before she had them, our other female found her a box in the corner of the porch and sat with the white cat all day. Two kittens arrived and the mid-wife washed them. She has sat with the blind mother and her babies ever since they were born. She is very alert to marauders or any other danger that may threaten. I don't know if the kittens will survive the constant washing from both cats.

"I wish I knew what made the white one blind. Her pupils are enlarged all the time and they seem to glow. I have seen her start to cross the yard, walking slowly and feeling her way, and then step into the pan of water."

It is good that no one need walk alone. Your magazine was given to me as a Christmas present and no better gift could I have gotten.

OF MAY

Dear Editors:

The May cover is an exquisite piece of work. May we see more of such covers in the future.

Blanche Wolfram's article on Anergex is most helpful. Thanks for publishing it.

As a member of the American Poetry League, I am interested in the poetry page. This month (May), I found "Spring Pussy Willows" by Esther D. Eden excellent. I also enjoyed reading about Bobby in the Back Fence.

Regarding the Himalayan cat—it is beautiful in many ways but who decided first what were the perfect features of a Longhair? To my mind, the word grace is synonymous with the word cat and no animal with squat legs will ever appeal to me no matter what rules the breeders set forth.

AUTUMN IN LIMEKILN

Dear Editors:

Greetings from our gang—four older members and six juniors—to CATS Magazine. The six young ones were gotten to console one of our older cats when she lost her kittens. Each weighs two to three times as much as their adopted mother now, but she still is the boss and they know it.

I do have a problem perhaps someone could solve. This same cat is now pregnant again. She is a quarter Siamese and was only six months old when she came into season. She lost that litter and the embryos showed that the kits had died early in conception. We don't know if this miss was due to her youth or her size at that time. We would like her to have this litter and would appreciate any advice anyone could offer. She is now almost two and has increased in weight from four to seven pounds, but is still extremely dainty and small.

This brings to mind another question—one of our cats—nor any of our friends' cats came in season last fall. There wasn't a kitten born in the entire area. First time in years this has happened. Explain—anyone?

SHELTER PLANS NEEDED

Dear Editors:

The Tulsa SPCA plans to build a catery on to its present shelter as the cat accommodations are inadequate.

We would appreciate any advice, information or suggestions on a practical construction plan and efficient operating arrangements.

We are aware of the danger of feline enteritis and its epidemic danger and would be grateful to your readers for any preventive for this hazard.

Any and all help will be dedicated to the welfare of all cats.

Mrs. J. L. Dawson, Jr.
2542 E. 56th Place
Tulsa, Okla.

JUNIOR LEAGUE???

Dear Editors:

I am fifteen and a junior member of this wonderful cat fancy and I'm certain there are many of us who would appreciate a junior's column in your excellent magazine. Winnings of our cats could be printed apart and the news of young fanciers would be most interesting to us.

I would enjoy corresponding with some of them.

Lewis Williams

SAD SURPLUS

Dear Editors:

Can't you make more of an effort to emphasize the importance of spaying the pet cat in an attempt to cut down the simply appalling number of unwanted kittens.

Even the Siamese are in grave trouble here in southern California. Far too many are being bred. And far too few breeders explain to new owners at what age the females are capable of reproduction. The city of Los Angeles is saturated with semi-Siamese and even homeless purebreds. The shelters are full of them.

SHE LIKES US

Dear Editors:

CATS Magazine is endlessly interesting. I like the stories about individual cats, the articles and advice on training and health. I like the page of poetry. I even like the classified section.

A little ad I sent in, beside paying for itself, brought me the pleasure of correspondence with some delightful people.

So, all in all, thank you for your devoted work in behalf of cats and their human families.

ANNOUNCING CATS MAGAZINE 1958 SECTIONAL AWARDS

With this issue, and for August and September, we turn over much of CATS to announcements, listings, and illustrations of the 1958 All-Sectional and All-American Cats—the true royalty of American catdom, selected mathematically from the winners of every show in every association.

We invite all of you to share with their owners the beauty of these cats and the joy of winning the justly famous awards.

GOLDEN BOY BEST OF 622 M-W CATS

Top cat of the 1957-58 show season in the Midwest is RM Qd. Gr. Ch. Rosemont's Golden Boy, magnificent Cream Longhair male owned by Frances Kosierowski of Detroit. For the fourth straight year he has overcome all opposition to become his section's contender for Cat of the Year.

Second to him, and highest-scoring female is RM Qd. Ch. Wolfgang Melody of Be-Ba. An outstanding Seal Point Siamese, she is owned by Mrs. Elwood T. Baker of Freeport, Illinois.

Other Midwest leaders are KonKeKe KoKoMo of Elyria, Burmese, who is best O.S. Shorthair, and Db. Gr. & Qd. Ch. Blue Gables Glamour Girl, Best O.S. Longhair. Top Manx are Gr. & Tr. Ch. Xantha's Candace of Tra-Mar and Db. Ch. Tra-Mar's Woodcutter. Two Silver Tabbies: Ch. & Gr. Ch. Lady Bobo of My-Lo and Ch. Springbrook Tinkit, are the Best and Best O.S. Domestic Shorthairs.

The Midwest found 622 cats and kittens vying for show honors this year—the highest number ever—with a total of 148 finally winning CATS Magazine awards. Ruth Coe Livingston and Anna and Robert Milke had six winners each, and five ribbons go to Dick and Marion Tracy, Dorothy Anderson, Karen and Phoebe Bjerkeng, and Kay McQuillen. Madeleine Christy, Mrs. E. L. Schaus, Bette Collins, and Marie Wilson each gained four awards.

Six of this year's award-winners have made good the promise of kitten days when the A-A scoring system selected them as "most likely to succeed." They range from RM Db. Gr. Ch. Donald Duck of Dunesk who was AMK in 1953 through Tr. Ch. Wyn's Winners Snow Bunny (54), Tr. Ch. Elco's Major Markwell (56), Gr. & Qd. Ch. Chirn Sa-hai Cricket of Kalyan and Green Lane Van of Velvet Shadows (both 57) and Gr. & Qd. Ch. Laurentide Solitaire who is both MHM Kitten and tied for AM Frost Point female this year.

Longest AM record is that of Ahmaq of Katnip Korner dating from 1952. RM Gr. & Qd. Ch. Lady Diane of Beverly-Serrano and McKnight Tar Baby started in 1953, while Tr. Gr. & Qd. Ch. Dalai Jakki began his career in 1954.

A total of twenty-one Midwest shows was divided eight ACFA, ten CFA, three CFF.

LADY LILAC LEADS THE WEST

It was the Shorthairs this year in the West with the four highest scores going to Siamese. Leading the list, and thus the West's candidate for Cat of the Year is RM Db. Gr. & Qn. Ch. Boren's Little Lady Lilac, sensational Frost Point Siamese female owned by Dr. and Mrs. Ralph C. Boren. Top male, and thus eligible for O.S. Cat of the Year is Mrs. Fred Galvin's striking Qt. Ch. Quinn's Blue Knight of Fan-T-Cee, Blue Point Siamese.

Highest-scoring Longhair is the Blue male Gr. Ch. Wimauma Pierrot of Zoda owned by Zoe McEachern, with O.S. LH honors going to Mrs. Walker K. Johnston's Orange-Eyed White Ch. Windibank Patti Kake. Leading Manx were Gr. Ch. Xantha's Nicholas and Tpl. Ch. Ri-Bo's Nixie. Tpl. Ch. Reene's Scamp of Silver Vista was top Domestic Shorthair; O.S. was Purple Sage Zita of Kiva.

These awards were earned in the greatest show season ever held in the West with more than 822 individual cats appearing over-and-over in a total of thirty-three shows (10 ACFA, 8 ACA, 7 CFA, 5 CFF, 3 UCF). This compares with 724 cats and 25 shows in the 55-56 season, and with 789 cats and 32 shows in 56-57.

The long show lives of Western cats are justly famous. This year's listing shows three famous old-timers still winning against all comers: Pied Piper of Barbe Bleue made his first AW appearance in 1950—and was Cat of the Year in 1951! Qd. Ch. Billig's Patina has been on the roster every year beginning in 1951, while Tr. Ch. Lamar's Karen of Norpark has hit it seven successive times, starting 1952. The world's first and only Quintuple Grand Champion (grand in all five associations), LaChata of Beverly-Serrano, started her AW appearance in 1954 and hit OSCY in 1956. Others beginning with her are Gr. & Qn. Ch. Sha-Lin's Pra Ping Thai, Db. Gr. & Qn. Ch. Ocean View Dream Boy, Tr. Ch. Ri-Bo's Nixie, and Qd. Ch. Lamar's Tabithan.

Numerical honors go to Pearl R. Allison whose cats earned eight awards; six each went to Dorothea Woods and Olive Hall; five to Mrs. Chris Klinkhammer; and four to Helen Smith.

FEWLINES 'BOUT FELINES

NEW KITTEN

He came—a flopping carpet fringe,
With timid voice like rusty hinge;
Snowflake feet—as light as that,
A feather's brush his gentle pat.
Each ear a tuft of wisped smoke-grey;
His eyes green stars, not yet sun-ray;
The nose, pale-pink, embroidered silk
That dares to sniff the dish of milk,
And after tongue in petalled lap
Warm fills, tail-muffed he curls to nap;
No better charm keeps socks from darn—
Than fur-ball found in next to yarn!

—Betty J. Uhle

IF THE CASE WERE SUCH

What a strange race of cats it would be.
If the case were such as people think,
With every cat a she.

—Bobette Sullivan

THREE CATS

The first purrs softly in my arms,
Exerting all her feline charms,
Or tumbles lightly as a clown
To land on feet of thistledown.

The second rides a witch's broom,
Her curses shattering the gloom—
A raucous hussy of the streets,
Who brawls with every Tom she meets.

The third one, with maternal pride,
Safeguards two kittens at her side
And looks upon the world, serene,
When each small kitten face is clean.

I never shall be asked to make
A choice, which of the three to take:
The pet, the mother, or the floozie—
All answer to the name of "Suzie."

—Ruby Lyle

NAME FOR A KITTEN

A bit of black and yellow fluff
Collapses, purring, on my cuff;
She snuggles down against my arm
And sings a song of kitten charm.
We think her black and yellow fur
Suggests an easy name for her;
It fits her looks—it fits her feel—we'll call this little one "Chenille"
Because it suits the wooly wench:
It means "Caterpillar" in French!

—Margaret Demorest

TO A MUCH LOVED CAT

In your cats' Heaven will there be
An ample lap, a cradling knee,
Paper to rustle, wool to tease,
Provocative birds on climbable trees?
Will milk be served at each miaow
Creamy and warm from some godly cow.
And fish leap straight
From stream to plate?
Will warmth be yours as you desire,
Basking in sunshine, drowsing by fire,
And eternal mice with saucy eyes
Provide celestial exercise?
In your cats' Heaven will there be
Place for a mortal memory?
The shape of a hand that smoothed
your fur,
The tune of a voice that roused your purr,
Will these persist to comfort you,
When all the way of life you knew
Has been transposed by earthly years
To timeless, cat-ordered, heavenly spheres?

—Edith MacWhirter
(from the New York Herald-Tribune)

ALLEY CAT

With graceful bearing, dignified
He walks his shabby slit of earth.
How does he come by innate pride,
This mongrel child of random birth?

For him no arbitrary line
Of class division can deflect
The will to pride, or can define
The right to walk in self-respect.

—Elva Ray Harris

SCHEDULE

We have a round alarm clock,
calico and furry,
who clicks away the minutes
melodiously purry.

The trouble is her timing
and her wide-awake green eyes arouse us much too early and never synchronize with the alarm we planned on.

We rise and start to scold.
But after breakfast coffee,
she is so nice to hold.

Filled with cream and liver,
after starting us on our day,
she hunts a quiet corner
and sleeps the day away.

—Eva Sparks Taylor

ON PURPOSE

Our household ran as smooth as grease
Until she came and took a lease
Upon our lives and with her nervy Cat ways turned ours topsy-turvy.

She came to visit, wished to stay;
In this we let her have her way—
We kept her since she was so sleek,
So lost, so little and so MEEK!

We thought 'twould be a cinch to train her,
That with a word we could restrain her,
But found a look in her direction Sent her flying. Such objection

To each order, gave us pause
Till we were putty in her claws,
Disorganized within our ranks And fell for her sly pussy-pranks.

Then to her wishes we'd concur
Just to have her come, and purr.
Too late, we found this appurrtained
To her campaign to get US trained.

—Phyllis Mahn Potter

You can tell when a cat has seen a dog by the size of her tail.

—Thoreau—Journal, Nov. 15, 1850

Among musical sounds, some children calling their kitten home by some endearing name.

—Thoreau—Journal, June 25, 1852
(From "The Cat in Thoreau"—ms.—Gladys Bollman)

FOUR FROM SIAM

Like pink-and-white mice, in a cuddly heap
Are four new kittens fast asleep,
But before very long a smudge appears
On the tips of their noses, the rims of their ears.

By the time they open their slant blue eyes,
Their tails and their feet show deeper dyes,
And they scamper around on chocolate toes
While the color on ears and faces grows.

When they stop being kittens and start being cats,
They've sleek brown leggings and masks, and that's How four little kittens, so white and pink,
Grow up to have cat fur trimmed in mink.

—Ethel Jacobson

OUR CHILEAN KITTEN

by Gretchen Butrick

I first met Pelusa in Santiago, Chile, and selected her myself from a basket of five little black and white kittens. They were as much alike as peas in a pod but Pelusa was different. She took one look at me and fled to hide under a table. I thought she was not only high-spirited but showed good judgment, so she was the one I brought home in my arms as a Christmas gift to my son and daughter.

I was a little worried about the reception Pelusa might receive at home, not from my husband and children but from

Pelusa and the Chilean Orchid

Juanita, our Chilean cook. Already we had bantam chickens and a large grey rabbit, whose existence she could not justify, but to my relief Juanita was all smiles when she saw Pelusa. A cat would be useful, she said, they catch loucas (loucas being Spanish for mice). Alas, at that time, Pelusa was hardly larger than a mouse, herself, except for her thick and silk-like fur that grew more beautiful as the months went by. Indeed, that is how she got her name, for in Castilian pelusa means something soft and downy—like a powder puff.

It was clear from the beginning that Pelusa liked beautiful things. At times she would sit quietly entranced by the majestic mountains and the idyllic countryside around her. In the mornings she loved to sleep under the orange trees in the garden but in less angelic moments I would find her exploring with her claws my one surviving orchid plant. I never actually saw her chewing the leaves but there was evidence that she did. Perhaps she changed her color like Babou, the "long-cat" that Colette tells us of. This famous French writer fancied that Babou though seemingly black was probably white in snowy weather, dark blue at night, and "red when he goes to steal strawberries."

Be that as it may, Pelusa's life was well regulated, for each afternoon when I went to school to bring my children home, she went along too—not just like an obedient dog but shooting in and out from behind trees and bushes and occasionally leaping from nowhere at my feet. She seemed to enjoy my fright and astonishment. At such times, I wondered if Pelusa had sadistic qualities.

When we reached home, Pelusa was seldom with us. "She is lost," I would say. "As soon as I give the children their milk and sandwiches, I must search for her," then suddenly and ever so deftly a little white paw from under my chair would tug gently at my skirt. I believed then and I shall always believe that this was a game with Pelusa.

By no means were her pranks confined to just the family. It seemed to me whenever I had guests they brought out the demon in Pelusa. She would invariably pick out some woman who was fussy about cats and scratch furiously on her chair. The fact that she was being viewed as a baby panther bothered her not at all. When I tried to catch her to put her outside, she would make a flying leap through the air and swing on the forbidden curtains.

In early infancy she scorned the pretty bed I made for her to stay in at night. Her place was on the foot of my blanket and that's where she slept. I know that many cats do sleep comfortably in baskets and like it but not Pelusa. She even hissed when she passed those woven strips of wood, and louder if she thought I was around to hear her.

How strange that Pelusa should have come into our lives one Christmas only to part from us the next. Christmas had seemed quite the same that December of 1943. The days were warm and sunny, flowers grew abundantly and the orange blossoms were brilliant against the emerald green foliage. Surrounding us everywhere were the still snow tipped mountains, giving us a feeling of home and making us believe we were not so far away after all. Everything was the same except we were leaving. My husband, who is a Foreign Service diplomat, had been transferred to another country. It was during the war and impossible to take Pelusa with us.

At our new post, I remember a cold, bleak day in an impersonal hotel room where my daughter sat writing a tear-stained letter to a friend back in Chile. In her childish hand she was asking for news of her rabbit and her chickens but most of all about her kitten. The last we heard of Pelusa, she had adjusted herself well to the new occupants of our old home—and I think it was true because cat will do what has to be done.

Through the years we have had other pets, beloved and adorable, but when I think of my enriching experiences in South America, my most loving memories are those of a boy and a girl and a kitten called Pelusa.

REALLY, WE ONLY STOPPED TO SAY HELLO!

What fortunate summer traveler has gone through the entire vacation season without ending up feeling like this small Blue Point Siamese? Which chance visit didn't conclude with your sleeping (?) on

MONCRIF'S CATS

Les Chats

by

François-Augustin Paradis de Moncrif translated by Reginald Bretnor

• •

ELEVENTH LETTER

We conclude in this issue of CATS Mr. Bretnor's final chapter of Moncrif's "Cats", the prototype of all cat books, first published in Paris in 1727.

If they should be susceptible to conceit, in what Animals would it be more pardonable? Surveying the play and the harmony which there is in all their members, does it not appear that nature has given particular care to their construction? She has given them an advantage which always succeeds among men; that is to have what we call a countenance. The ensemble of their features, which shows a character of ingenuity and of cheerfulness, and particularly their whiskers are gifts which they could not have received but by right of their charm. The brightness of eye still so esteemed among men is certainly lavished upon the cat species. [6] Our eyes have for us no other faculty than to enable us to perceive objects with the aid of light, and they become just useless to us whenever it ceases to exist. Those of Cats carry their own light with them. The Sun or those artificial lights for which we have an indispensable need in almost all our actions are no more than a spectacle to them; and while we, arrested often in our most interesting designs, impatiently await the time when darkness ends, Cats in love perceive each other clearly on the tiles; and, more fortunate than we, their eyes in seeking there the object which they love, suffice for its discovery.

These luminous qualities are so worthy of attention that they have merited a eulogy in the book of one of our most celebrated Academicians of Science. [7] He does not hesitate to honor the eyes of Cats, and those sparks which we see crackling when we rub their fur the wrong way, [8] by virtue of natural phosphorescences; this remark will make known to future ages that Cats were not useless in the Academies, and that they contributed to the perfection of the Sciences.

Let us now survey their character. It is dangerous, if we credit vulgar opinion; and this error, however shameful to our judgment it may be, finds itself adopted even by persons of good sense: we need not be at all astonished by this; men of intellect are ordinary folk in many ways. It is the result of a certain share of laziness, which always remains in those very people who have the greatest inclination towards learning; and some, moreover, scarcely condemn their credulity, when their vanity is not at all wounded by believing.

As we have already established that Cats are capable of attachment and of kindness in their conduct towards men, however little we may enter into detail we will still prove that they have all the delicacy of friendship; but some will deny us that this friendship can be constant, and that we can count on it; they will not fail to cry out against the scratching paw. It is our task then to make known the candor and the innocence of this so much reproached claw; let us examine first its form: it is so sharp, and exacts so much attention from the Cat, a dexterity so perfect never to get it caught, that men who reason least agree on it when they say that Cats make velvet paws. This manner of speaking, which appears to be nothing but a rebus, is nevertheless an acute analysis of the admirable skill with which it is necessary for a Cat to use his paw so that his nails will not scratch. Behold then Cats in a perpetual discipline, and of what sort moreover? a discipline so vastly troublesome that it upsets absolutely the order and the natural action of the springs of his machine. So it is in a state of holding-in, in a constant mindfulness, that Cats live with us. If our eyes are opened to this situation, will we dare not to feel, not to avow that the affection of Cats is the most complimentary and the most tender which we can inspire? It is true that during the course of his life, a Cat will have perhaps a dozen lapses: despite him, his claw will again perform the play which nature has imposed on it; still this will be no more than the transport of an involuntary joy, the scratch moreover never falling except on distrustful hands; nevertheless there are natures which are shocked: they take no further account of past virtue: they go wild: they forget everything it costs a Cat not to scratch you more often; such injustice! such ingratitude! An amusing and considerate friend has passed his life in self-constraint for you, and you will not pardon for his friendship's sake a few thoughtless moments? Could society endure among men if they regarded with the same carping spirit the clawings (if I may so express myself) which they exchange, and almost always willfully, in the course of their intimacy and even of their friendship? This small lack of uniformity in the conduct of Cats, far from inclining us against them, is a lesson in behavior which should only make us envisage them as animals as capable of instructing us as of amusing us.

Let us calm ourselves, Madame; one day we shall see the merit of Cats generally recognized. It is impossible that in a nation as enlightened as our own the prejudice in this regard should prevail much longer over so reasonable a sentiment. Doubt it not at all, in social groups, at spectacles, at promenades, at the Ball, in the Academies themselves, Cats will be

It is a generally accepted principle that cats and cars do not agree and, to go a step further, cats and travel can be included in this same category. So often I've heard it said that cats, being such independents, become enamored of places rather than of people to the extent that one will return to a previous home should the family move. I've even heard that a cat's paws should be buttered to remove the scent of her old home so that she can not find her way back and will remain wherever she has been taken. Our Fritzie belies the fact. From the very beginning she has been a tolerant, though not overly enthusiastic, traveler.

Through hundreds of miles of travel, we have found that the most important factors to consider are a cat's comfort, her safety, and her owner's peace of mind. The importance of the last mentioned will be impressed upon you only after you have found your self in such odd positions as: sitting behind a steering wheel sharply chanting, "The cat, the cat, the cat—," after someone has unexpectedly opened the car door while friend cat is off her leash (she'll probably only blink an eye, yawn, and snuggle into a more comfortable position); or collecting curious stares as you sit in various parking lots trying to tempt her appetite with a bit of fresh liver or a dish of melted ice cream.

Concerning a cat's comfort it can be said that she'll be most content with as little restraint as possible. For her safety her owner will be most content with as much restraint as possible. In traveling with Fritz we have used a leash whenever the car doors were to be opened but turned her loose as soon as we were on the road.

A cat with a lead attached to her collar gives the appearance of enslaved royalty; but a cat in a harness looks downright plebeian. It hurts her pride and is an insult to her dignity; but it may save her life. However, a leash improperly used can be very dangerous.

At first we couldn't find a harness to fit the Schnicklefritz so fastened the leash to her collar with very nearly disastrous results on two different occasions. Each incident, sorry to say, was due to my own poor judgment and thoughtlessness.

The first time I neglected to shorten the leash so that Fritz could not reach the window and, leaving her in the car while I talked to my mother-in-law a short distance away, I looked up to see our "Puss" clinging desperately to the outside of the car door. Her collar was pulled up so tight that she could not give even a feeble cry. I shudder to think what would have happened to our poor pet had I been further away or in the house.

Chastened but not yet fully aware of the dangers of the leash, on the second occasion I took Fritzie from the car and fastened her leash to a wooden clothes pole in the yard. That seemed as safe as any way to restrain her. No sooner had I turned my back than along came my mother-in-law's playful young puppy. I heard Fritz growl and spit and turned to see her run up the wooden pole and hang herself over the cross piece. I rushed to grab her as she twirled in mid-air. Needless to say that was the end of the leash-attached-to-the-collar routine. We have since acquired a harness which fits comfortably and with no danger of strangulation.

OF CATS AND CARS

For Fritzie's convenience on her initial trip we placed a shallow box of dirt on the floor behind the front seat. She seemed quite content to sit in her box (perhaps this token terra-firma gave her confidence) and only occasionally she'd jump up to view the passing countryside from the vantage of my lap, placing a delicate paw on the steering wheel for balance. Never mind that it was needed to keep the car on the road.

If two of us were in the car, she'd visit whoever sat on the right side. This could sometimes prove embarrassing; as when a friend riding with us late one evening fell asleep. He awoke with a start to find our "Boots" (short for "Puss 'n Boots," my husband's affectionate nickname for the Fritz) sitting on his chest, gazing solicitously into his face. It was a bad moment for our friend but Fritz just wondered what had made the poor man jump so.

A cat is naturally suspicious of strange smells and sounds. Her refusal to eat while on the road causes her owner anxiety but I doubt that it is a real discomfort to the cat. She'll eat when she's really hungry. The excitement and fatigue of a trip have made me lose my own appetite at times. A cat is just as susceptible to the boredom of long hours of travel or the fascination of new places. Food must wait when one is discovering new worlds.

Fritz traveled well because our car and luggage carried our scent and there was something of the familiar mingled with the new and strange. We had an opposite experience in transporting a cat which had just been given to us. We, who were total strangers to him, put him into a strange car unfamiliar in scent and terrifying in sound. The frightened animal could not be held but raced round and round the car over the tops of the seats and then crouched, howling beneath the front seat. The trip so frightened him that it was weeks before he finally accepted us as friends.

In the matter of Fritzie's adjustment to new homes, we had to "play it by ear." But we soon learned that it was more a case of finding how far to trust our pet than of her becoming accustomed to new locations.

Fritz was fully grown when we acquired her and had undergone some rather unhappy experiences in being passed from one owner to another, so she was given the freedom of the house but was not allowed out of doors. After she became accustomed to us she, of course, had complete freedom whenever we were at home.

While traveling, I first tried to take her walking on a leash. She hated it and refused to move. After we had settled in a small town for a week, I decided to chance turning her loose; thinking that in such a place, if she should wander off, we'd be able to locate her easily enough. To my surprise, she had no desire to explore further than the space beneath the porches at both the front and back of the house, and spent long hours sitting in the sun on the front porch as though she had owned it all her life.

With each successive move we trusted Fritz a little more until it got to the point where, much to my consternation, she went out for a stroll the same night that we moved into a new apartment. She didn't return immediately and I became worried to the extent of walking the length of the darkened street softly calling her name, tortured by visions of our poor "Boots" wandering hopelessly through the streets trying to locate her new home, befuddled by traffic and frightened. I shouldn't have troubled myself. No sooner had I re-entered our kitchen doof than the door opened behind me (Fritz has mastered the art of opening unlatched doors) and my little friend sauntered in for a swig of milk. No need to worry over this blasé old traveler—new homes were now old hat.

Though Fritz adjusted well to new faces and places, there were times when we wondered how new landlords would react to her. We were often tempted to sneak her into our room when no one was looking but usually asked permission explaining that she had her box of litter, her own pillow which we would place on the floor, and a supply of old newspapers to spread under her accoutrements.

She was generally welcomed after a personal introduction. I recall only one grudging reply, accompanied by a critical stare, but in the affirmative, and that from the devoted owner of a huge dog whose most cherished pastime was roughing up neighborhood cats.

Altogether in the course of our wandering, the Schnicklefritz has taught us that a pet who is well loved and secure in her place in the family will never stray too far. True enough, she may have some set notions of her own as to the time and place to go exploring or on a hunting spree, but with sensible restraint and a genuine concern for her comfort and peace of mind she will become a good traveler.

THE EYES OF YOUR CAT

"Tips to the Novice"
by
Blanche
Wolfgram

PART I

How often in walking along the street have you noticed a person who does not have the use of his eyesight? Everytime you see this, your heart goes out to these unfortunate individuals and you ponder over how they can get along with such an affliction. One thing that it does is to remind you how very fortunate you are that you are not in the same condition. What has this got to do with cats? Well, imagine if you can what this would mean to a cat. It would not have the aid of other cats nor could it have some other animal act as its eye. Yes, I know it has been said that it is possible to help a cat in this condition by limiting its quarters so that no possible harm could come to it and I do believe a blind cat could live out its life in this manner. However, I believe, the kindest and most humanitarian thing in a case like this would be to resort to euthanasia.

It is important, then, to try to help your cat all you can to prevent possible blindness. This article will try to help you by pointing out the conditions and various diseases that can affect the eyes. Very simple precautionary measures can be taken to combat some diseases while the aid of a veterinarian is required to cope with the others. The most important thing to remember is to take care of any condition early, thereby reducing the possibility of more serious complications setting in as a result of your negligence. First of all, let's discuss the eye of the cat in general so that you may get some idea of its workings and why.

The eyelids consist of a thin fold of muscle covered on the outside by a layer of skin upon which the fur grows and on the inside by a thin membrane known as the conjunctiva. Along the edges of each lid are the meibomian glands. They secrete a fluid which prevents the eyelids from sticking together. The purpose of the eyelids is to help protect the eyeball, mechanically wiping away foreign bodies such as dirt, hairs or other objects, and to shut out the light so that the cat may sleep. Under the lids is the membrana nictitans commonly called the third eyelid or haw. Exactly what duty this performs is not well understood other than it may help to protect the eye and also aid in its cleaning.

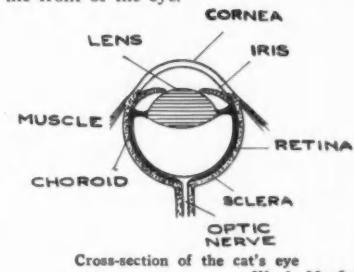

The lacrimal glands situated above the eyeball under the upper lid secrete the fluid which we call tears. Small amounts of this fluid are always present and drain from the eye through two openings which are close to the nose, one in each lid. These unite to form the nasolacrimal duct which passes through the lacrimal bone in the skull and opens into the nasal cavity draining down the throat. This is a very efficient system which prevents the fluid from running out over the lids onto the surrounding fur of the face.

The orbit is the bony framework of the skull in which the eyes are situated. Within the orbit are the muscles which control the movement of the eyes in all directions. Most are connected to the eye ball but one of them is fastened to the upper eyelid.

The carnivorous (flesh-eating) animals of which the cat is one, have the eyes facing forward so that they can keep the prey in sight while it is being pursued. The herbivorous (vegetable-eating) animals have the eyes set on the sides of the face so that they can see to the front, the sides and the back. This enables them to see the carnivorous animals and have a chance to escape. You will notice that a cat cannot turn its eyes very much and must resort to turning its head to see in other directions.

In comparison to its size, the cat can be said to have the largest eyes of any of the common animals which, incidentally, enhances the beauty of the cat. The eye itself is almost completely round. The optic nerve and the arteries and veins enter the eye from the rear. The outer coating of the eye is known as the sclera or white of the eye and covers about three quarters of the surface. The muscles which control the movement of the eyes are fastened to the sclera. The remaining portion of the covering is known as the cornea, a transparent material directly in the front of the eye.

—W. de Marlow

Inside the sclera is another coating known as the choroid with a layer of cells containing crystals which give off the luminous coloring when light shines upon the eyes in the dark. The choroid terminates into the ciliary muscles which form into the iris and also support the lens.

The iris is a circular curtain behind the cornea and is the colored portion which the cat controls in making the opening called the pupil which becomes either a thin slit in bright light or wide open in darkness to allow more light to enter. This wide action of the iris, helps the cat to see better in the dark than any other animal.

Right behind the iris is the crystalline lens. As light passes through the cornea and iris the lens reduces the size of the image to fit the eye. After the light passes through the lens it is directed upon the retina which lines the inside of the choroid. This retina is an extension of the optic nerve and is the actual organ of sight. As light and shadow strike it signals are sent along the optic nerve to the brain where objects are recognized. Between the cornea and lens is a space known as the anterior chamber which is filled with a transparent liquid to allow the iris to function easily. The space between the lens and the retina is filled with a clear jelly-like substance known as the corpus vitreum.

We now come to some of the conditions that can adversely effect the eyes and also some of the diseases which can infect the eyelids. Trichiasis is a condition in which the fur of the upper lid grows down and in, instead of out as normally. This will cause irritation, excessive fluid will form from the lacrimal glands, and the eye will always be very wet. It can be cured very easily by a veterinarian and should be attended to as soon as it is noticed for it will not clear up by itself.

Entropion is a condition in which the entire eyelid or a major portion of it turns toward the eyes.

Ectropion is a condition in which the eyelid turns outward and portions of the conjunctiva can be readily seen. Both of these conditions can be alleviated by a veterinarian.

Fungus readily attacks the eyelids because of the moisture that is always present and usually shows up by bare patches on the outside of the eyelid.

Conjunctivitis is a condition in which the conjunctiva becomes inflamed, and swollen. It can be caused by blows, injuries, bacteria, virus, dirt or other foreign matter, exposure to cold or strong wind, and from drafts when a cat looks through a crack in the door or window when air is blowing through. In conjunctivitis, the eyes will water constantly, will have to be cleaned very often, and must be treated promptly. If not, more serious complications can very rapidly set in.

There are many diseases affecting the eyes themselves such as scleritis, an inflammation of the sclerotic lining; chorioiditis, an inflammation of the choroid; retinitis, which is an inflammation of the retina bringing about partial or total blindness; keratitis, an inflammation of the cornea, indicated by a cloudy or milky looking condition and iritis, an inflammation of the iris. Cataracts are the formation of cloudy or opaque lenses which obstruct the vision in varying amounts to complete blindness.

All these conditions can be brought on by blows, injury from battle, other diseases and many other reasons. Generally, they can be detected by your doctor through the use of an ophthalmoscope—an instrument especially made for the internal examination of the eyes. Thus, if you should notice anything strange about the eyes you should immediately have it cared for because there is a very good possibility of affecting a cure.

Next month we shall discuss the various other eye troubles of kittens and cats and means of treatment.

We at Gallahad are considering undertaking a long-range research project concerning diet, health, fertility, and possibly other factors in cats—over several generations.

We will need the cooperation of several breeders whose only extra duties will be to keep complete records of matings, births, diet, illnesses, etc., and to furnish them to us at regular intervals.

Any of you who wish to help in this work (which will entail no change whatever in feeding or breeding methods) please write me at Box 8082, Pittsburgh 16, Pa. (All information will, of course, be kept strictly anonymous and confidential.)

C. F. F. ANNUAL

The 1958 annual meeting of the Cat Fanciers Federation and a meeting of the CFF Board were held in New York City April 3.

Treasurer's report showing a balance of $3388.49 and Recorder's report a balance of $2723.10 were read at the Board meeting.

Judges were placed on the Probation List as follows: Mr. and Mrs. Richard Birkett and Mrs. Ann Bieneman, Longhairs and Shorthairs; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Magnan, Siamese and Shorthairs.

Motions were carried that all Manx cats must be CFF registered before being entered in CFF shows; that only cats between the ages of eight months and two years be entered in the Novice class; that Burmese cats be placed in the Solid Color Classes; and that sanctions be denied to one-day shows and carrier shows.

At the Annual meeting the Recorder reported that 11 Grand Champions, 64 Champions, and 30 catteries had been added this past season. Fee for registration in the Stud Book was raised to $2.00.

Changes were made in the show rules as follows: Reserve Winners' ribbons, light lilac in color, be optional with each club; cats showing evidence of being pregnant shall not be shown; exhibitors may not talk to judges, nor be allowed within the judges' enclosure during judging; judges shall withhold all prizes from cats showing noticeable defects, congenital or otherwise, unless they have scored 85 points; entries not amenable to handling at a particular show shall be denied awards but shall be counted as present and competing; all display ribbons and awards are to be shown only on back or sides of the cages, and fronts are to be as open as possible.

A standard for the Egyptian Cat was accepted and this breed became eligible for registration in CFF. Silver Tabbies were returned to the Silver Division in All Breed Shows. The Annual CFF Board meeting is to be held the day before the Annual meeting in the future.

Officers for the coming year were elected as follows: President, Mrs. Silas H. Andrews; First Vice President, Mrs. James J. Small; Second Vice President, Mrs. Ruth Larson; Secretary, Mrs. Ralph A. Wilkinson; Treasurer, Mrs. Alice S. Dugan; Recorder, Mrs. Joseph Richmond.

Cats Question Box

Conducted By E. A. Renaux, D.V.M.

My five-year-old Siamese, neutered, has an anal gland abscess. This is the third one within the past three years. Whenever anything develops that requires the attention of a veterinarian, I take him, and the doctor prescribes proper treatment, however, he is at a loss to determine the cause of this condition. His diet is carefully taken care of, and since he is a house cat and doesn't get much exercise I give him a teaspoon of light mineral oil once a week. He has a very distressing habit of licking the cement floor in the basement. I planted a large flat of wheat thinking he would eat that and stop licking the floor, but it did not help. He has a good appetite and is never sick.

—Clementine Waterons

3636 Rustri Place, St. Paul 12, Minn.

The condition of the anal gland is not unusual, and there is very little that you can do to avoid the trouble. Unless it should become more troublesome it would be best to take care of the abscess formation as you have. Otherwise the gland could be surgically removed, thus eliminating the source of trouble. The addition of a mineral supplement to the food may help correct him of licking the floor.

Can you suggest any reason why our cat chews at his front feet. He keeps the hair on his front paws nearly all pulled out. There are no sores nor any discharge but the paws are a deep pink. I have tried all salves and medication I have read or heard of to no avail.

—Mamie Lantz

351 Park Avenue, Corning, New York

Instead of salves or ointments (which he no doubt tries to lick off and so further aggravates his feet) try keeping the hair between his toes and pads thinned out very well. Also soaking or bathing his feet in a mild antiseptic solution of boric acid may help.

What is the maximum age at which a kitten may safely have a litter for the first time. Is five years too old?

—R. L.

Bradley, So. Carolina

I usually say that a cat should not be purposely bred after eight years of age. At five years I would not anticipate any difficulty aside from what might normally be expected.

CAT SHOW

*Catdom's elite were bored. Even the flutter
Of ribbons to be awarded left them cold.
Three alley cats foraging in the gutter
Could see it all. Diamante was being cajoled
With a catnip bag to pose. Miss Sweet White Rose Yawned under a dangling apple toy. Pink Nose
Lounched in a satin boudoir, weary-eyed.
There was no sign of interest, it was plain.
The alley-cats watching on the outside
Loudly mauled and lashed at the windowpane.*

*At once within raged pandemonium,
Which reigned until the bristling base-born cats
Were chased away with shouts, and then—ho-hum—
Boredom anew engulfed the aristocrats.
In vain the red white blue prize at this stage
Was hung upon Magnolia Cloud's gold cage,
She only dozed. But in her dreams she spat
Approvingly with wild grimalkin grace,
As at the moment when she'd singled out
A peering black tom's sinister war-scarred face.*

received, or rather sought after. It is impossible that we should not come to feel that in our Cat we possess a friend who is the best of company, an admirable Pantomimist, a born Astrologer, a perfect Musician, in short the union of the talents and the graces; but we can not yet determine with real precision when this epoch will arrive, which will so justly be compared to the age of gold: reason will have to destroy the work of prejudice, and the progress of reason is never swift. Regarding the influence which reason maintains among men, when she directs them it seems as though she fears to let them see it is she who leads; this is quite humiliating for humanity, and quite contrary to the interest of Cats. I have the honor to be, etc.

The Back Fence . . .

Tried to talk the Editor out of printing the Back Fence in this month's issue. Pointed out that nobody would have the time nor the inclination to sit around reading such with the award listings and the wonderful photographs in the magazine. Too much nice weather outside . . . too many places to go. . . . But, as you can see—I didn't win.

That is a pretty sneaky way to introduce you to a member of the cat family who did win.

The New York Mirror is running a Social Security Number Game—strictly legal, however. Should your Social Security number be drawn, you are twenty-five dollars richer.

Nicodemus Adams, a four-year old Platinum Persian, was one of the lucky ones. He has no Security number, but he is a wage-earner. A professional model, no less.

His owner, Louiselle Adams, used her number and Nicodemus's name on the coupon she submitted and it was chosen. The game editors conceded it was fit and proper and Miss Adams received the cash. She agreed to buy Nic his favorite foods: broccoli, raisins, stewed corn and kidney.

To each his own, but in my humble opinion, any living creature who would select that diet for gastronomical delight should promptly lie himself to the nearest and softest psychiatrist's couch.

And, by some happy chance, we just read in the Richmond, Virginia, News Leader of a pet cat who is a likely candidate for such treatment.

Mrs. G. W. Tutwiler was so pleased when two lovely stray cats came to her house to stay. She had never been able to have a pet before. The delight did not lessen even when both cats bestowed upon their benefactress litters of kittens virtually the same day.

She said she would have had no trouble in placing all nine kits with neighbors, but in the first mad flush of having "pets," she decided to keep a daughter from each litter as well as the original two. Total: four female felines.

As is the way with cats and time—the last count was thirteen! Overpopulation is still not the concern. Being a medical technician, Mrs. Tutwiler is not alarmed with even medical expense. 'Tis just the age-old "strained domestic relations."

Lily, one of the originals, has always been a slightly neurotic gal. Now, jealousy is driving her to measures unusual and distressing. She has a nervous habit of trying to hide from all these new cat faces by scrambling between the sheets on the bed in the spare-room.

Mrs. Tutwiler admits that with the high cost of food and the even higher costs of analysis, the neighborhood, once so co-operative, is about to be canvassed and appealed to lend a home to a kitten, adopt a cat and help Lily rehabilitate herself.

Lily must have been a motherless cat.

The American Psychosomatic Society had Dr. Philip F. D. Seitz of Chicago address them at their annual meeting in Cincinnati. Using cats as subjects, he did a paper on early separation from mothers.

In his study on infantile experience and adult behavior, Dr. Seitz took three normal, average kittens.

Spots was only two weeks old when separated from his mother and fed with an eye-dropper. He cried almost continuously for a week.

Blackie was left with his mother for almost three months. And his emotional loss was scarcely noticeable.

King, left without tears, at the age of six months.

The scientists then began to study the intelligence quotients and the complexes of the three cats.

Required to jump from a table, Spots lingered longest and revealed most anxiety. Introduced to a carrying case, he took longer to recover from the shock than did the two others.

He was less able to learn to respond to given stimuli and tended to resist them even when it was folly.

When offered food in a bowl with a screen on the top, he persisted in trying to get it out, becoming more and more frustrated. King simply upset his bowl and lapped the liquid that ran out. Spots proved more aggressive but less successful in feeding competitions. Blackie and King shared their dish under similar circumstances.

Concluding, Dr. Seitz related, the earlier the separation from the mother cat, the less able the cat was to adjust to new situations.

Just what Dr. Seitz's findings would be on a mother cat whose children and grandchildren stayed too long might prove interesting.

From psycho to psychic is just a jump, and in making it, we report from the Vineland, New Jersey, Times Journal. They write of a cat, two-year old Pearly, who has an almost perfect record in predicting the weather.

In Newfield, the weather-experts on T.V. and radio are never consulted. Today, no one in Newfield makes any plans involving the weather without getting in touch with Lou Lafarina, Pearly's owner.

Mr. Lafarina devoted a lot of time to his pet and noticed that she was a little different from most cats. He started to keep accurate records and reports that by her habits he can forecast with certainty.

When she washes her face only to her ears the day will sunny; washing behind her ears means rain; wag of tail and fishing will be good. In the winter, when one ear stands straight and the other lays low on the head it will snow.

Even the local postmaster calls for "following day" reports so he can advise his carriers the garb of the day.

Would that some such prophet would turn up around this town! I'm a reversetype-sooth-sayer, though. Be it a torrent from above, the moment I don my raincoat and leave shelter the sun comes racing out and either I swelter in my waterproofing, or I spend the next week wondering where I left my coat. No responsible judge am I.

'Cidentially, the Saturday Evening Post's You Be The Judge feature had an interesting subject recently.

The Help Our Dumb Pets Society found a site in a residential section where they planned to build a new animal shelter.

The city zoning authorities refused to grant a building permit on the grounds that the area was restricted for "homes or buildings of a philanthropic, charitable or religious character." The society thereupon filed suit.

"A non-profit shelter for animals is certainly a charitable institution," counsel for the society told the court.

"This may be charitable, but it is not an institution with the meaning of the law," attorneys for the neighborhood argued.

Had you been the judge, with which group would you have agreed? The court said: "Neglected animals are no less objects of charity than are human beings. Their treatment and disposal are matters regarded by the legislature as pertaining to the public welfare." Therefore, the court concluded, an animal shelter is an institution.

Long may it live.
